instagram: @littlebigrocket This was my first week back after moving to Australia, and also my first time submitting a game video. But that's not where my worry lies. No, my worry lies in the quality of my video. Sure, sure, I've put a lot of work into my new computer setup to create and record my videos at a high quality. But the video card in the game launcher keeps crashing and it crashes all the time. I've tried like 3 different card. I didn't do proper testing, because it just wont work reliably. This is only my fourth time submitting a video in my entire life. And my next video wont even be a game video. It's just gonna be a tip for switching out your graphics card. So yeah, I kinda suck at videos. But the rest is amazing :D If you enjoy, then: (1) = You should get it here (2) = I think you should get it here (3) = Don't buy it, you're an idiot twitter: @littlebigrocket instagram: @littlebigrocket

Developer: Aerobright Studio Publisher: Aerobright Studio Genre: 3D Shooter Platform: Windows P1.1 - The game-play is very simple. - You have to keep heading toward the exit or a portal and shoot the flying "octopi" that are keeping you from it, and try to survive it. - Doors are visible, and there are many of them, with walls, seperating them, and several ways to get from one to another. In fact, sometimes, when you think that you are about to be trapped, you can open a door, leading you to another one, or another level. - Your partner - A humanoid machine - helps you to get through your adventures, as the next level is locked until you open it. P1.2 - There are several different types of "octopi" enemies - Some are small, and are in the foreground when they open their mouths, others look more like octopuses, or small spiders, and then there are ones in the back that look like praying mantises. - You can go from the beginning of the game to the end. Each level starts with a text, explaining the situation, and the story behind it. Maybe there are also credits - but I do not remember. - When you start the game, the texts are not there yet. You see the opening cinematic, and you are asked to download the game. Your character is on a space station, abandoned for so many years. - Except for the stealth part - it is a wide space station with several levels and different views. - The visual style of this game is pretty good - The music sounds like an old movie trailer. - You have a very strange companion, a computer that is found in the same level as the main player, with her artificial intelligence and first level abilities. - What do they do? - They open and close doors, can get you maps, places, can help you to be stealthy, and so on. - If you ask them to do something they can only do it once in the game, so there are no multiple solutions for the same quest. - Otherwise, the AI is good -

I had no problems with her, and she could help me in several very difficult situations. P1.3 - Early on, you can get to the exit, by opening a door in front of it. - Later on, some doors will only open after a certain number of steps. - But at least 2009/138/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 21 November 2009 concerning an obligation to inform consumers about the country of origin of tomatoes and tomatoes-based products and amending Council Directives 2000/13/EC and 2008/5/EC (debate) President The next item is the oral question to the Commission on Directives 2009/138/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 21 November 2009 concerning an obligation to inform consumers about the country of origin of tomatoes and tomatoes-based products and amending Council Directives 2000/13/EC and 2008/5/EC by Margrete Auken, on behalf of the Committee on the Environment, Public Health and Food Safety - B6-0014/2010).

Margrete Auken Madam President, the big US supermarket chains in Europe know that there is opposition to their buying patterns. All the supermarkets are keen to deal with Tom Price, Mr Chertoff, Mr Hubbard, Mr Patrice Lumumba and others, but they are there for a reason. And that is of the utmost importance. Big corporations must abide by Regulation (EC) No 417/2000. This is called the 'Prüm' regulation. With the big supermarkets essentially having had access to all the Member States' information since 2002, they can choose products if they so wish. In fact, the big supermarket chains are now benefiting from only paying a small percentage of the sums paid to the states if they choose to go to the country of origin. In other words, at present, they are paying only 3% or 4%. Is it any wonder then that they favour the cheaper products from other countries? They obviously do not have the least scruples. In order to do away with this easy money, the big supermarkets are now trying their utmost. We should firstly use the big supermarkets to promote the European food industry. By this I mean to underline that the European food industry does not want to do with products from third countries, with drugs and with hazardous substances. But if the big supermarkets' purchasing patterns also means that we import inexpensive products from third countries into Europe, this is nothing other than an invitation to the big corporations to do so. I therefore call upon the Commission to safeguard the future of the European food industry by updating the 'Prüm' regulation, in other words by calling upon the Member States to pay the maximum amount if their citizens should decide that they want such products. In the past and

Blog Stats Perusing the detritus of life Tiffany and I “victimised” the last day of school last week when I nearly put us in the car and drove off to something last minute, and she decided to say no thanks. This drama somewhat unrealised (!) was picked up by my teen peer group mates, who have been, for nearly 2 months, trying to drag Tiffany and I into some vague “activities” for the weekend. (Cue very unnatural predatory look) To continue my theme of deals with teens (or at least my peer group), I had this, in my hand, which was given to me by a friend about ten days ago. “You’re going to like this,” he said, “it’s a great read.” I read it, in fact, while on a bus, it going to a conference. I am not a BIG BLOG reader (not even now i’ve signed up for the new york times) so I just didn’t know what to think at the time. But I reread it over the weekend, and I think I have to write about this little book. It is all about narcissism. I won’t say much here, because frankly I’m not sure what to say, except that I think we all have our own version - their version, mine, another reader's, his, hers. It's an anthropological mission to find our own individual version of social narcissism, and just how serious it is. Yes, many of us write about our narcissism and humblebrag a bit, but for the most part we know what the health of our narcissism feels like — we're just not usually so honest about it in a book. Most narcissists rarely admit to things. (If they do, it's written down in a journal, or somewhere online. There's actually a good book on narcissists, but I don't know much about it). Nicholas Carr makes some interesting points about how the
