A Tennessee judge has warned county child support employees to stay away from Facebook and Twitter after discovering the accounts of a woman with more than 50,000 followers. Facebook accounts with names like “Going to Jail for Not Paying Child Support” and “Fight the Power of Child Support” have over 6,000 followers, WSMV reports. The accounts are being run by “Tracey” McDougal, a Tennessee woman who is being pursued by the Social Security Administration for $54,000 in back child support payments. McDougal, who says she has no income, took to Facebook and Twitter to publicize her case against the federal government. Judge J. Dennis Arnold of the 14th Circuit Court, ordered McDougal’s accounts to be shut down, and warned others against doing the same. “I’m issuing this order as to those two accounts, which I will not hear about or consider any exceptions at any place, in any form, ♦
